

CHRISTIAN FICTION AUTHOR MISTI JACKSON ANNOUNCES NAME CHANGE ON FUTURE PUBLICATIONS

June 29, 2004 -- Effective immediately, Christian fiction author Misti Jackson has changed her name to Misti Sandefur. The new name took place on June 26, 2004 when the author married Kevin Sandefur.

Jackson's first marriage took place in April 1992, and when she divorced in June 1998 due to domestic violence, she chose to keep her married name instead of going back to her maiden name (Bailey), because she and her first husband conceived three children during their marriage. Then when the Lord blessed Jackson with a wonderful man and she re-married in June 2004, she chose to take her new husband's last name. Until that time, though, Jackson wrote and published a Christian fiction novel ("Help From Above") and writer reference ("On the Net Resource Guide for Writers") under the name of Misti Jackson. Since Jackson discovered it would be too much of a hassle to have the last name changed on her books, she decided the books would remain in the market under the name of Misti Jackson; however, any future publications will be published under Misti Sandefur.

"I wish to apologize to my readers for any inconvenience," states Jackson.

If you have any questions regarding the name change or ordering of books published by the author, she asks that you contact her via email (info@mistisandefur.com).
